Sorry, I don't have cell service where we're staying. The only other thing I says was asking if you'd be open to seeing a counselor.

Also, I'm not going to read some long paper with your thoughts. If you want me to know it, you can call me and tell me. I kind of don't want to hear your thoughts though because I think they will be manipulative. What I want is for you to understand what you did and admit it. I feel like anything I hear from you is just going to be more hurtful because you don't get it.

You've told me that you understand and you've told me that you don't want to hear me speak. You also told me before that you'd not quickly jump to calling me horrible and we haven't even had a conversation. I don't feel understood and I don't feel that you've been fair and I don't feel that understanding me has been a priority nor do I think my feelings have been a priority for you. You may believe that I don't care about you, but coming to that without having a real, face to face conversation and treating me the way you have is abusive. You've done this before. Hurting me because you are hurt isn't going help you feel better. Understanding me might.

Regardless, now, I'm so hurt by how quickly you were able to believe that I have no respect for you and that I'm completely untrustworthy. It's hard for me to understand how you could come to that so quickly unless you already believed it.

I'm honestly at a loss for how to move forward. You said that you want that, but after your messages, I just need to know if that's something you actually want. If you can't assume that I'm trying my best, we really can't move forward.

I'm sorry I hurt your feelings. What I want is to know the truth, and I'm not convinced you'd have me know it. I'm skeptical of what you'd tell me. Based on the current facts, I know that I have been lied to. The rest can be discussed. You can tell me about your intentions. I want to believe that you care and that somehow this was just a big mistake. It's hard for me to believe that because my understanding of our relationship is that you knew me well enough to recognize what you chose to do was hurtful and you did it anyway and kept it from me.

I'm scared that if I listen to you, I will be manipulated. I don't want to play the role of the fool.

This situation is really terrible. I wish it was a different situation. You may have respect for me, while having done some very disrespectful things.

If I know that I have been lied to, how can I then be open to hearing you and believing it? It requires me to trust you, when you've just broken that kind of trust. I am afraid. To listen to you would be to put myself at your mercy.

It's funny because while I was in Florida this past trip, Robyn asked me if you and I were exclusive. This is what I told her, I said, "Technically we are not exclusive, however neither of us are seeing other people or looking to date other people. We could do that if we wanted, but we would obviously talk to each other about it first." That's the kind of relationship based on respect that I thought we had. Never would I have imagined that you would start dating other people w/o consulting me and then keep it from me.

Especially at that time. A time when supposedly according to you, you felt really close to me. When you were living two lives. One where you profess your love for me and another where you decide to start dating other people and hide it from me. And I didn't have a single clue about it. Because you never told me. You kept it from me. Then when I find out I've been lied to, I'm told it's not a lie. I'm told to trust you. How??

It's analogous to the woman at the pharmacy who said nothing when I told her I feel like there's something on the back of my pants. I didn't ask her a question. She didn't have to tell me, but she knew that it would upset me and that the information was significant to me. She didn't tell me and I decided she was not someone I wanted as a friend. Except that in this case, she would be an intimate lover, and the blood on my pants is infidelity.

That's my last explanation.

I'm not having sex with anyone else nor am I planning on it. You getting tested has been on my mind since that exposure. I almost didn't have sex with you because of it and I considered protection, but I didn't really want to make you feel like I thought you were dirty or something and I didn't feel it was considerate to ask you to get tested while you were still processing that. I was willing to take the risk. I know that the way this happened was really shitty, but the testing thing was purely for my and your health.

Here are my concerns in order of priority:

- 1) not being consulted about the decision and how that relates to lack of respect for me and lack of concern for how it would affect me/us
- 2) being lied to
- 3) that you don't understand and won't admit that you lied to me
- 4) being cheated on

I know it's not right, but I have an urge to date other people to get back at you. But it doesn't make sense for me and you wouldn't care anyway. At that point there's really no reason to be seeing you as anything other than a friend.

Do you not think I can get dates? Because I can. I'm very capable of meeting people and dating them. I have strong appeal to all kinds of people. I could meet someone who is better for me than you. I had chosen not to because we were focusing on us. That's what we had discussed, until you decided not to anymore and to not bother to discuss with me or even let me know.

Another thing that I left off of my concerns, but that I actually care about is that you start looking elsewhere when there are problems in a relationship. Twice you've decided to see other people without telling when you were upset with the relationship. It is troubling to know that your main coping mechanism for relationship stress is getting romantic attention from women.

If you're unhappy and that causes you to want to see other women, you should just break up with me. That's much more respectful of me than going behind my back. You shouldn't be with someone who makes you want to see other people.

I'm tired of being tortured with an onslaught of shit. Don't be a chicken. Just do it and it will be fine. You keep dating people and I will still think you're a decent person. I will move on and after some time we can probably be casual friends.

If it works, I'll send you the links. I'm uploading them to Google Drive.

I do think that I sometimes look to get attention from others and validation when I feel insecure in our relationship. I agree that is a problematic behavior of mine. You are definitely my priority. Well, I talk about friends in it to disclose everything. Jamie, April, PJ, and Kate are all important. With the exception of Jamie, I've not been intimate with the others. Honestly, you asked for this information. I've listened to all your anger. You won't even watch this after asking for it? It seems that you have no real desire to understand. You seem to just want to hurt me and justify your lousy feelings by blaming me. You don't even know what I've done. You don't care.

You talk about limits and boundaries, well, I'm going to lay mine out. I won't be told that I'm disrespectful, a liar, and a cheater when I have broke no agreement that I was aware of. I won't be told that I'm disrespectful, a liar, and a cheater when you are not interested in even hearing the facts. I won't listen to you attack me endlessly when you are going to ask for me to share certain information then when I do, you act like I should have to justify why you should watch it.

I realize that you're hurt. I am too. No matter how hurt you are, being mean to me is not acceptable. You may not like this, but we were not on the same page. I was operating from mine, and I understand that you are operating from yours. I could have made different decisions, and I don't disagree with you that I should have handled things differently, but from my perspective, I neither lied nor cheated. I have learned more about you and myself from this. Choices that I make will be different in the future. I'm really sorry that my actions have been and are hurtful, but hurting me isn't going to help that.

I did not ask for this information once. What I asked is that you make a video explaining how this happened and why you did it, not a list of all the people you cheated on me with. I resent you trying to say that I'm trying to be mean to you by telling you what you did to me. It's not being mean. These are things you did and I'm calling you on it. be worse than reality, but it wasn't. This is terrible. I can't handle it

How could you do this? I have 6 minutes left. I don't know why I'm still watching this

I finished watching the video. While I didn't want to see it, I now realize how important it was that I did see it. If I hadn't seen it, I would have downplayed things because I wanted to believe that you care and that you wouldn't do things like that. The video told me things that were way worse than I imagined and that I didn't want to know. The fact that you hid these things from me, knowing that it was pertinent to me and knowing that they would hurt me makes it even worse. I can't handle any of it. It's way too much for me. You talked about wanting to be close, make decisions together, telling each other about intimate things, all while you kept these things from me. Your explanation of having free time led you to date other people is also terrifying. I really wish I didn't see this. I can't unsee it and it's better to deal with reality I guess.

Thanks for talking with me on the phone. I really miss you and I wish that you were here to hike with me.
